Care of Bulbs After They Are Through Flowering

After a bulb has flowered it prepares itself for next year's bloom by withdrawing all the sap out of the leaves and stem, and storing this in the bulb.

No bulb should be lifted before the foliage has died down completely.

When the foliage has withered, and can easily be twisted off, the bulbs are ready for storage.

If you can keep your bulbs dry during the summer months it is better to leave them in the ground.

A Guide to

Successful Bulb Planting

BY

PETER VALINGA, "The Dutch Bulb Specialist"

GENERAL INFORMATION

BULB STRUCTURE

A bulb consists of four or five layers of food storing tissue, which enclose—in miniature—the new flower and leaves.

The root system which the bulb develops after planting draws in the very beginning its sustaining nourishment from these food-storing outer layers of the bulb. After the root system has sufficiently developed, it takes over and starts feeding the miniature flower in the bulb.

The foundation of the bulb is its root system. Only a low ground temperature, 40-45 degrees Farenheit, will induce a bulb to develop an adequate root system.

The reason why we have always objected to planting tulip and hyacinth bulbs before the end of October, and this applies especially to Southern California, is that a high ground temperature retards root development.

A high ground temperature not only prevents an adequate root growth, but it also prematurely develops the flower inside the bulb.

WHERE TO PLANT YOUR BULBS

Customers often ask me: "Where is the best place in my garden to plant my bulbs?" My answer has always been: "Plant them where you can enjoy them most when they are in bloom." The general objection to this is that when, during the latter part of October the tulip and hyacinth bulbs should be planted, the favorite place in the garden is still in full bloom. This problem is overcome by potting (see page 3). Generally speaking bulbs do best in full sun. They may, however, be planted in partial shade. Most effective display is obtained by planting in clusters against a background of shrubs, a brick wall or the side of a house.

PREPARATION OF THE SOIL

After having selected your location prepare the ground by digging to a depth of 18 inches. If your soil tends to pack mix in a liberal amount of cow manure, bean straw, or peat moss, as bulbs like a loose, well-drained soil. Raise your bed 6 to 8 inches above the ground level to provide maximum drainage.

CARE OF BULBS AFTER PLANTING

Water immediately after planting and at least once a week until the rains start. If the rains are light or at long intervals, continue watering as the soil must be kept moist.

How to Plant Your Bulbs Directly in the Ground

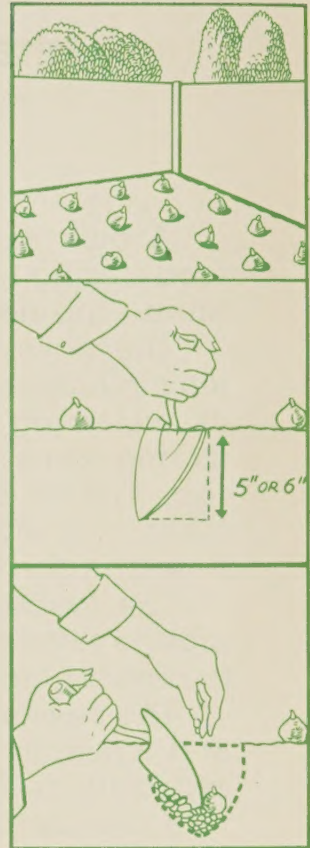

First determine from the chart on page four the proper spacing and depth to plant each variety.

1) Before planting lay the bulbs on top of the ground. It is easier to do this than wonder where you planted the last one.

2) Using a hand trowel, prepare a hole to the proper depth and place the bulb right side up.

3) Push bulb firmly into the soil — remove trowel and cover.

The planting of anemones and ranunculus requires special attention as it is more difficult to determine the top side of the bulb.

In anemones, look for the remnants of the old flower stalk. This usually appears as a circular, fuzzy spot. It has no relation to the shape of the bulb. This spot should be planted face up.

Ranunculus should be planted prongs down.

These two varieties seem to do best when the bulbs are soaked for twelve hours between folds of wet burlap.

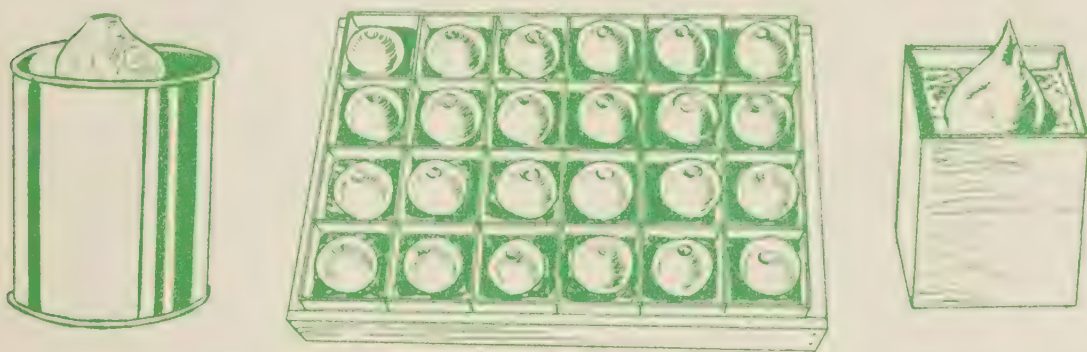

When planting Lily-of-the-Valley, it is most important that the roots be carefully spread out over a mound in the hole and covered over, exposing only the pip above ground.

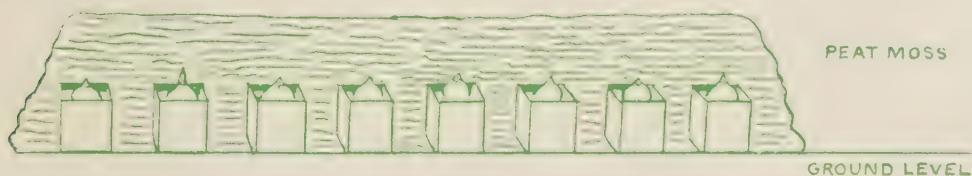

How to Pot Your Bulbs For Future Transplanting

Often times the garden location in which you want your bulbs to bloom is filled with other blooming plants just when the bulbs should be planted. To overcome this you can pot the bulbs at the proper planting time and later move them to the garden at your convenience. Here's how to do it:

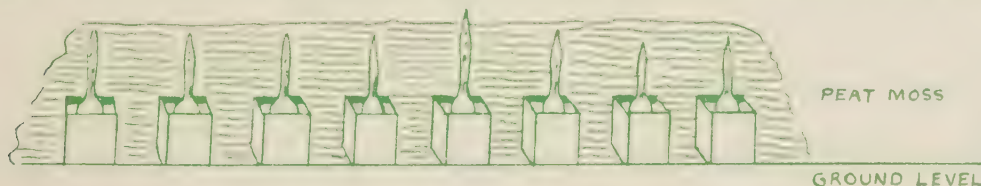

Take a 3 x 3 x 4 wooden plant band, 5" pot, or a quart-size can and fill it to within $\frac{3}{4}$ " of the top with a rich garden compost. Use one pint of bone meal to one bushel (8 gallons) of soil. Push bulb in firmly to depth illustrated. Then add a thin layer of sand. This will make it easier later to remove the mulch.

Place these containers on top of the ground in the coolest, most shaded spot in your garden and cover over with 6 to 8 inches of peat moss, soil or leaf mold. Keep well watered.

After 12 to 14 weeks, the root system has been fully developed and has started to feed the flower, which by now is 4 to 5 inches high—breaking through the peat moss. When the very top leaves begin to curl back the time has come to remove the peat moss.

By the time the sunlight has turned these buds to normal green, the plants are ready to be moved where you want them to bloom. If you like, you may bring some hyacinths or daffodils indoors in front of a sunny window where the heat of the house will force them into early bloom. When placing the container in the spot you have selected, sink it to a depth so that the level of the bed is approximately one inch over the container.

LILIES
OF THE VALLEY
CONVALLARIA "FORTIN"

One of our oldest customers has grown Lily of the Valley "Fortin" for many years in her garden. This variety, and she has tried them all, is the only one which has established itself for more than ten years in her Piedmont garden.

Will you do us a favor? If you have planted this variety please write and tell us whether or not it has been successful. How did you plant—where—what soil conditions—amount of sun and water. We did not give you planting instructions last spring, and so, if by chance your planting was a complete failure, we will be happy to replace your original order free of charge.

PRICE: 12 pips $3.00.....100 pips $20.00

Delivery in January, 1950.

CALLA LILIES

The pink and yellow Callas are summer blooming bulbs and should be planted from January until April. Plant bulbs about four inches deep, and keep well watered during the growing season. They can be left in the ground in the milder regions, but should be lifted, dried and stored in a frostless place when there is danger of frost.

CALLA RHEMANI SUPERBA. This is a new and far superior variety. Flowers are fairly large and are pale pink.

Price: 30c each $3.00 per dozen $25.00 per 100

CALLA ELLIOTTIANA. The yellow calla lily has larger flowers than the pink and is a beautiful garden plant. Plant February to April.

Price: 30c each $3.00 per dozen $25.00 per 100
